

As a satellite radio subscriber - paying for the service monthly -- I find it outlandish that the NAB feels it has the prerogative to restrict and regulate the types of programming available to myself and other subscribers -- if they had a better quality and more varied programming -- then satellite radio would not be such an attractive option. Traveling cross-country and up and down the eastern and western seaboards, I have been bored stiff by the repetitious and mediocre radio programming and the oft times poor reception. That is not the case with my XM -- I have variety, good sound quality, control over the regional narrow-minded opinions blathered on by talk hosts and DJ's, and a delightful absence of inane chatter and ad interruptions.
